

Site Visitor Query

Odom's Razor is a word play on Occam's Razor, and I adhere to the dictums of Occam's Razor. My motive is simple, to reach out to readers of my books to share my interpretations of current events.

I attempt to:

- Express my thoughts as purely, clearly, definitely, and concisely as ever possible.
- Use my knowledge and ability to foresee the farther out future. History is on my side.
- Prove true the adage that "arsenic is more digestible than truth."
- Write what no U.S. newspapers or magazines dare write, what no TV channels dare report and no radio stations, other than call-in talk shows, dare discuss.
- Find a common denominator among seemingly unrelated events or their relationship to historical occurrences.
- Cover an eclectic range of subjects.
- Avoid giving contemporary advice. Nothing is more worthless than unsolicited advice.

I need your help.

Odom's Razor began in July; three months, 12 weekly articles. Site visits increased three-fold in July over June, August tripled July visits, and September increased 38% over August visits. I want to know how many visitors to Odom's Razor have read either Mothers, Leadership, and Success or America's Man on Horseback: A Fable? or El nuevo conquistador de México: ¿una fábula? or all.

Also, what topics interest you most? What areas have the most appeal? For instance:

- |  |  |

Your thoughts about items of interest are needed, particularly from those who have read my books. Please go to [e-mail author] on the Odom's Razor index page and let me know your preferences.
